

PITCH COMPETITION & ACCELERATOR JUDGING

Judges don't always see a deck the same way — and every applicant notices.

EvalLens gives every application in your batch the same structured first read, on one consistent bar — so your ranking holds up when a hundred founders compare notes. Screen a full cohort before the deadline; your panel makes the final call.

WHY PANEL JUDGING BREAKS AT SCALE

More applications, more judges — less agreement.

VOLUME

Every deadline brings a flood

Hundreds of applications land in the days before the deadline — more than any panel can read closely before decision day.

PANEL TIME

Judges aren't full-time reviewers

Mentors and partners squeeze scoring between their day jobs. The first few applications get real attention; the rest get a skim.

THE BAR

Five judges, five different bars

One judge weighs traction, another weighs the pitch itself — the same application can land two very different scores depending who reads it.

REPUTATION

Rejected founders talk to each other

When the reasoning behind a call can't be shown, the batch reads it as favoritism — and that story travels through your community.

THE WHOLE LOOP, END TO END

How a single judging round runs

01	Collect the batch	Applications come in through your existing form or portal — everything lands in one place before the deadline.
02	Set your judging bar	Choose the scale, weights, and criteria your competition or accelerator actually judges on.
03	Run the machine pass	EvalLens prepares a structured first read of every application — about 4–5 minutes per submission after upload.
04	See the ranked shortlist	The whole batch lands in one leaderboard, each with its own one-page scoring report — ready before any judge opens a deck.
05	Score it with your own judgment	Judges weigh what EvalLens surfaced against their own read, and set the score that counts. The call stays human, every time.

• WHAT YOU GET

What your panel gets

• A scoring report for every application

Strengths, risks, and a recommendation to advance or pass — the same shape for every submission.

• Questions for the judging round

What to verify live, already surfaced — no more cold reads on stage.

• One consistent bar

Every applicant runs through the same logic — defensible if anyone asks why.

• A ranked shortlist

The whole batch on one bar, from strongest to weakest — the field at a glance before judging day.

• Gaps and missing data

Where an application is thin, and what to ask the founder before advancing them.

• Evidence you can point to

Every score traces to a line in the application — not a judge's gut feel.

• AI PREPARES, THE JUDGES DECIDE

Not a black box. Not a judge replacement.

EvalLens prepares the analysis; it never makes the final call. It gives every judge the same starting point — so the deck from a founder nobody's heard of gets the same first read as the one everyone already recognizes.

One bar for every application

Every submission runs through the same scoring logic — the outsider gets the same first read as the founder everyone already knows.

Every score is cited

Scores trace to evidence in the application — defensible to your judges, your sponsors, and your community.

Judges set the final score

Control stays with your panel. The ranking runs on their call, not the AI's.

AI prepares the analysis. Humans decide.

• WHERE IT FITS

Built for how a competition judges

Pitch competition judging

Every submission gets the same real first read — so the strongest pitch doesn't get lost between two judges' different opinions.

Accelerator cohort selection

Score applicants against your program's thesis, not a generic rubric. Weight the dimensions that decide your cohort.

Live judging-round prep

Every application that clears the screen arrives with strengths, risks, and what to verify live — judges walk on stage with substance, not a blank slate.

Demo day & batch review

Screen a whole batch in one pass right after submissions close — every founder compared on equal footing.

Run a pilot on your next cohort

We screen a real batch of your applications, prepare judge-ready reports, and show how EvalLens ranks your cohort — while the final call stays with your panel.
